Celebrating Generational Transition and Cultural Resilience

Nukwangwtalawva!

We are at another stage of reflection in the year, having completed our Solstice ceremonies, a new dawn of generational transition has taken place in our society. Young Hopi women recently participated in their corn grinding ceremony to learn their cultural roles and connect to their deep roots in community while practicing their strength through spiritual and physical endurance. Another year has shown us that our Hopi way of life is sustained through another generation of teaching and learning from grandmothers to granddaughters.

Earlier this quarter I attended the Native Americans in Philanthropy Annual Gathering, my first since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic. I was honored to be invited to sit on a panel discussion on the topic of "Building Bridges Across Generations." I sat across leadership of all ages and experience like my "Shero" Lucille EchoHawk, co-founder of Native Americans in Philanthropy, peers like Eileen Briggs of the Bush Foundation that began around the same time I had in this field, and new and rising leaders like Nikki Piertos from the Tiwahe Foundation. We sat in circle with Native Youth Grantmakers Letkwu Moore Stranger and McKaylin Peters to share our experiences as grantmakers in our communities and support the growth and transition of one generation of philanthropic leadership to the next. The conversation was enlightening and reinforced my belief that at every stage, we must teach and include others in our learning process to strengthen our lines of succession and the sustainability of our roles in society.

Hopi Leadership

Natwani Coalition

Since the beginning of my tenure with the Hopi Foundation, it has been a journey of learning and experiencing a new profession of wealth-building, grantmaking, and redistribution. While most of our followers see the impact of our nonprofit programs, The Hopi Foundation wields an even greater tool through its philanthropy and grantmaking to invest in local farmers, seed-savers, and local nonprofits to support their initiatives. There is one common theme among this and it is to give back to the community through reciprocity and redistribution. When we receive, we gain the capacity to give to others. When we learn, we gain the ability to teach as an organization. We all can serve in part to this process as a provider of seed, labor, wisdom, and learning.

As a Hopi woman, generosity is innate to me culturally as I contribute to seed my own cornfields and gardens, to receive the fruits of our labor, and manage our harvest to feed and support my family and clan each year. As I grow to find my own wisdom in this constant cycle of reciprocity and redistribution, I witness more and more how these practices support a healthy economy, functioning kinships and relationships in the community, and most relevantly support generational leadership over these cultural systems.

I hope that you will enjoy this season along with us and choose the type of impact you wish to make through The Hopi Foundation's mission of Lomasumi'nangwtukwsiwmani. I ask your help to donate to our vision toward a positive future of community development through the many projects we support.

Askwali, may this season bring forward the blessings of the monsoons to your garden.

HF Membership Gathering

Over a two-day period in May, The Hopi Foundation hosted two significant events in our history: the Member's Reflection Dinner and the Member's Meeting. These gatherings allowed us to discuss the impact and vision of each of our founding members in creating the organization. We captured historical insights and the deeper meaning of the Foundation's purpose and values, collecting content for video clips that will be shared with donors, our staff, and new board members for generations to come. HF Members, along with administration and Board of Trustees members, gathered to discuss membership roles, and the next steps for the group.

Sacred Mountain Prayer Run Collaboration

We proudly partnered with Native Americans for Community Action for the Sacred Mountain Prayer Run at Thorpe Park in Flagstaff, Arizona. This meaningful event featured a Prayer Stick Runner, who ran in reverence, praying for the wellness of participants and others in need of good health. This collaboration highlighted the importance of cultural traditions in promoting community wellness.

Community Engagement and Fundraising Success

Raservation. Iration. Vibration.

On April 26th, 2024, the Raservation, Iration, Vibration Show welcomed former members and volunteers of Culture Connection, Tim Randolph, Darlene Nuvamsa, and KUYI's own "MKI" Merwin Kooyahoema. They discussed reggae's growing influence on the Hopi reservation, recalling efforts to bring entertainment and visits by mainstream reggae artists. The interview emphasized shared beliefs between Hopi culture and Rastafarianism, underscoring reggae's profound resonance with the Hopi community. Guests also celebrated reggae's unifying power across the reservation and beyond, promoting a universal "One Love" message. The show's positive reception sparked hopes for a revival of live reggae at Hopi and deeper community ties.

In a subsequent episode, the show spotlighted both Hopi and Pueblo Native reggae artists, Casper, Ed Kabotie, and Shkeme Garcia. They showcased their journeys and the positive impact of reggae on the lands they've toured. They shared how reggae fosters unity and serves as a source of personal relaxation. The artists expressed optimism about younger Native bands continuing the tradition of uplifting music with positive messages, seeing it as a natural progression from their own contributions. In conjunction with the "Raservation. Iration. Vibration." listening series, a logo was designed by artist Ahwinma of Sipaulovi village, and with the new logo a T-shirt and holographic sticker was designed to promote the show.

Our collective efforts continue to cultivate Hopi growers grounded in traditional farming values and practices for the stewardship and protection of Hopi life.

Micro Grants

This spring, we received exceptional proposal submissions for our micro-grant program from individual community members. The program is designed to provide financial support to community projects that promote our local Hopi food system, sustainable farming practices, and enhance food security. This year, we awarded a total of $15,800 to nine individuals with projects ranging from tuupepqoysi (corn roasting pit) construction to creating garden beds. Information on the 2024 grantee projects will soon be available on the Natwani Coalition website.

Hopi Farmer's Market

In partnership with local groups and organizations, we help sponsor the seasonal Hopi Farmers Market, a free event for the community to learn ways to strengthen our local food system and support locally grown food by connecting farmers to consumers. The first market of the season took place on May 19th at the Peace Academic Center (PAC) and featured a diverse range of seasonal plant starters, handcrafted farming tools, and handmade goods, all sourced from local Hopi farmers and artisans. The next market will be on July 14th at the PAC.
